ICTURE OF THE YEAR!

Freeman Jackson of Enterprise Recalls Early Days on Farm

1931

Enterprise, July 25— On the 3rd of July last, Mr. Freeman Jackson, one of the oldest remaining residents of this community, celebrated his eighty-seventh birthday. Born on the old homestead near which he still lives, Mr. Jackson has spent the whole of his life a respected citizen of the Enterprise district.

In spite of his many years, Mr. Jackson's memory is very clear and he can relate many interesting happenings of his early days. His ancestors on both his father's and mother's side were United Empire Loyalists, leaving the United States after the Declaration of Independence and settled on the shores of Hay Bay in South Fredericksburg. His grandfather on his mother's side (William Wagar), at the time of the war of 1812, was the only man in the vicinity in which he lived on Hay Bay to own a team of horses. Horses being in great demand for war purposes in transporting soldiers and supplies, the team was requisitioned by the Government. Mr. Wagar was permitted to go along as a driver with wages which privilege he accepted.

At the close of the war Mr. Wagar was called to Kingston where he received pay for his horses and for the time he had served. With the money thus acquired he bought six farms of 100 acres each in the township of Camden in the vicinity of Enterprise. The farms are occupied by Bert Jackson, Arthur Brown, Alonzo Wagar, Milo Jackson, Chester Clark and Elmore Jackson.

For many years Mr. Jackson with several of his brothers was engaged in the lumber business and well remembers when the finest of pine lumber sold for $15 per thousand and lower grade for $3 per thousand. He also with his brothers did considerable road building throughout the township. Mr. Jackson brings to memory when there was only one small log house in what is now Enterprise; this home was situated near where the Royal Bank now stands.

Part of the drive house on the farm on which Mr. Jackson has lived for so many years is the first frame building that was built this side of Centreville and is well over one hundred years old. He has also had the unique experience in his life of ploughing in the early days with oxen, then horses later on and last year with a tractor.

Mr. Jackson well remembers when the farmers had what was called a community threshing floor, where the grain was drawn to a central spot prepared for the purpose and was threshed with flails. He has been a witness to the progress from threshing with flails to horse power, steam and gasoline tractors.

Mr. Jackson attended school in a little log school house near Mike Wagar's premises at the turn of the road on the way to Centreville and remembers when church was held in the school house by travelling clergymen and that the settlers with their family would attend the services, coming for miles around on sleds drawn by oxen.

He brings to mind the first buggy that appeared in the settlement and which caused more excitement than the first automobile or aeroplane caused in later years.

He recalls when a potash works was operated on the banks of what was then known as Dunn's Creek and which is just west of town on the highway leading to Tamworth. The settlers drew their ashes and cordwood to the works receiving for maple cord wood the sum of $1.00 per cord. Later the works were moved to the village and were operated by Robert Thompson on the lot now owned by B. N. Parks near the general store of O. B. Jackson. Mr. Jackson remembers when his father built the house on the farm on which he was born and recalls that the wages paid the carpenter were sixty cents a day.

known to have been killed and many wounded, including a number of women in the streets, in continuous firing and sniping during the afternoon after fighting at the university. Police and students blamed each other for starting the battle.

Troops made three separate attacks on the university building. More than 3,000 shots were fired there and in other parts of the town area. All business was suspended and stores, offices and banks put up steel shutters.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa.—Lady Joan Villiers, daughter of the Earl of Clarendon, Governor-General of South Africa, was bitten by a snake recently but suffered no ill effects as the snake was not of a venomous variety. She was stroking the reptile (a mole-snake) in the Museum at Fort Elizabeth when she was bitten on the right hand. No harm was done except two slight punctures in the skin, but there was considerable alarm for a moment in Lady Joan's entourage.

HAY BAY (PARKS-LOYST- McCABE) CEMETERY

This old cemetery is located in North Fredericksburgh Township, Lennox and Addington County, Ontario, Canada. It is just south of the east and west road running along the north shore of Hay Bay and overlooks the Bay. It is east of the old Hay Bay Post Office location shown on the plat map of 1878* on the land of Milo Parks, lot 7, Concession VI.

These inscriptions were copied in 90 degree heat on September 2, 1973. The cemetery is partly covered by tall weeds and poison ivy and undoubtedly contains many more fallen headstones with valuable historical and genealogical data. This ancient burial ground has a priceless historic potential and it is hoped that the writer's efforts will encourage the people of Canada to take steps to salvage and preserve what they can of their heritage.

Mrs. E. M. Reid

Mrs. E. M. REID, the noted palaeobotanist, died on September 28 in her ninety-third year. The daughter of John Copner Wynne Edwards, of Denbigh, she was educated at Westfield College, and taught mathematics at Cheltenham; she turned to geology and botany after her marriage to Clement Reid, of the Geological Survey, in 1897. Reid was a pioneer in the study of fossil fruits and seeds of the later geological formations, and Mrs. Reid threw herself wholeheartedly into this work, devising or improving techniques for extracting plant remains from peat, and bringing a methodical and highly critical intelligence to the study of the seeds and fruits so obtained. At that time it was by no means generally accepted that specific identifications were possible from isolated seeds and fruits, let alone from imperfect or fragmentary specimens which might have undergone alterations due to incipient fossilization. By a close study of the fruiting organs of living plants, however, the Reids proved conclusively that floral assemblages of the comparatively recent past could be reliably reconstructed from deposits which contained abundant fruits and seeds. Working backwards from Holocene and Pleistocene floras, their joint studies culminated in an extensive memoir on the "Pliocene Floras of the Dutch-Prussian Border" (1915). In 1916 Clement Reid died, only three years after retiring to Milford-on-Sea in Hampshire; his widow remained there for the rest of her life, and with great determination continued her palaeobotanical research. She described preglacial floras from Durham, with an important "Comparative Review of Pliocene Floras" (1920), and from then on was constantly consulted for determinations by botanists and geologists in various European countries.

After being joined by Miss M. E. J. Chandler, Mrs. Reid pressed her investigations farther back into the Tertiary, and in 1926 the British Museum (Natural History) published a volume by the two authors on the Bembridge (Oligocene) flora of the Isle of Wight, based on the a'Court Smith collection which had been acquired for the Geological Department of the Museum. Mrs. Reid was then asked to study, in conjunction with Miss Chandler, the extensive collection of pyritized fruits and seeds from the Eocene London Clay, which had been in the British Museum for more than a century. Seven years intensive work produced the "London Clay Flora" (1933), which at once took its place as a classic of Tertiary palaeobotany. In the introduction to these two monographs, and particularly the second, Mrs. Reid analysed with great lucidity the phytogeographical, climatic and evolutionary significance of the European floral succession throughout the Tertiary, as revealed by studies of angiospermous fruits and seeds. Certainty of identification depended on morphological and anatomical structure, which in turn threw light on secular changes of character within genera and families; biogeographical alliances of genera represented in fossil floras showed an increasing correlation in past Tertiary periods with present floras of the Far East, until finally the Eocene of southern England proved to have a tropical flora related to that of the present Indo-Malayan region.

After the work on the London Clay, Mrs. Reid undertook no major commitments, though she published a number of short papers either alone or with Miss Chandler, who lived with her and with whom she continued to discuss further studies on Tertiary floras of southern England. The final results of this prolonged research are now being prepared for publication by the Trustees of the British Museum.

Mrs. Reid and her husband lived most frugally; her life was strictly ordered with a disciplined austerity; she was critical but charming, and could always find time to assist other inquirers. She was devoted to her church and other local affairs, and found solace in reading, particularly books of travel. Her scientific work was the outcome of steady perseverance combined with originality and an analytical mind.
